

Central Ohio Mediation Firm Bringing Awareness to Elder Care Mediation

Service offers alternative to traditional legal process for families grappling with issues surrounding aging parents.

Pickerington, OH—April 17, 2018—Tough issues arise as parents, and other family members start to age. Things such as housing, the division of property, and medical decision making are brought to the forefront and can often make for very uncomfortable conversations. Bringing families together to discuss these difficult and emotional issues surrounding aging loved ones in a thoughtful participatory way is Rebecca Bickel's goal with the Elder Care Mediation Services offered through Civil Dispute Resolution Services.

"As loved one's age, siblings, and other family members are often grappling with sensitive issues like housing, estates, and medical concerns. We provide a safe and neutral outlet for discussion. My goal in any mediation is to keep the lines of communication open without turning family members into adversaries," said Rebecca Bickel, president of Civil Dispute Resolution Services.

Elder Care Mediation can save time, money, and minimize emotional distress. It's an alternative to hiring an attorney and the traditional legal process. Mediators are neutral third parties whereas attorneys take a clients "side." Mediation is private, voluntary, and provides the opportunity for all parties involved to have more significant involvement in reaching a solution and more control over the outcome of the dispute.

"At Civil Dispute Resolution Services, we foster communication and create a dialogue to create a resolution," said Bickel.

In addition to Elder Care Mediation, Civil Dispute Resolution Services, CDRS, offers mediation services in a variety of areas including (but not limited to) divorce, child custody, parental, and spousal conflicts.

While Civil Dispute Resolution Services is based in Pickerington, the firm offers mediation locally as well as globally with its online capabilities.
